FOREWORD

THE last edition of the Cumulative Index of the Proceedings of the National Conference of Social Work was published in 1906 and covered the first thirty-three volumes. For a number of years it has been quite obvious that a new and up-to-date edition was needed. There is a wealth of material in the Proceedings of the National Conference of Social Work of value to social workers and students of social work. A Cumulative Index makes this material easily available.

Some four years ago Mrs. Bertha Freeman Hooper, who had been the assistant editor of the Proceedings for nearly twenty years and was more familiar with the contents of the various volumes than any other one person, started the task of compiling a new Cumulative Index. Because of the changing vocabulary of social work and the greatly increased scope of activities coming under the name of social work, a new Index beginning with Volume I was made, rather than to attempt to revise the edition of 1906. This Index covers the first sixty volumes. Mrs. Hooper had prepared the original citations of the Volumes I-LIX before her death in the spring of 1933.

The Conference was fortunate in securing the services of Alice P. Atkinson, a trained catalogue librarian with an understanding of social work, to pick up the task where Mrs. Hooper laid it down. This Volume, therefore, represents the joint work of Mrs. Hooper and Mrs. Atkinson.

This Index is not designed to cite meticulously every possible reference but rather to be a usable working tool for social workers and persons interested in social work. It refers them easily and quickly to the material on any subject treated in the Proceedings of the Conference. It is proposed to revise this Index at five-year intervals, so as to keep it up to date and at maximum usefulness. The Volume is presented to the members of the Conference and the field of social work with the hope that it will be helpful in the accomplishment of the tasks of social work.

BERTHA FREEMAN HOOPER

IN 1913 Bertha Freeman Hooper came to the National Conference of Social Work as its official reporter. The routine gathering of papers from different divisions, the detailed work of getting the Proceedings into their final volume, called for a rare combination of skills which she was well qualified to give. She had served a varied apprenticeship as private secretary to two different executives in the Boston Family Welfare Society and later to the executive of the National Recreation Association.

She was not a professional social worker, but she had a knowledge of the different fields of social work wider than that of many professionals. She excelled as a private secretary. She knew the details of the executive's job better than the executive. In the midst of pressure she was able to maintain a detachment whose benefit the executive reaped. Quiet, self-effacing, with a mastery of detail and routine, she possessed that indefinable quality which makes of routine a tool for the release of human capacity. Is there, perhaps, a need for social workers and for the public at large to give recognition to that indirect service which bridges gaps, interprets the human equation, and makes available material whose imaginative use would otherwise be lost?

Mrs. Hooper had, to an amazing degree, a capacity to relate events and details so that their usefulness was increased. In her series of positions as secretary to executives of far-reaching influence, she was brought in close touch with large cross-sections of several different communities. The general public, board and committee members, staff members, passed through her office on their way to the more impressive sanctum of the executive. Many of this diversified stream will remember with affection and gratitude the sweet reasonableness with which she allayed their fears, smoothed their ruffled feelings, or in some other way made the approaching conference of a more concrete and definite value. She had the capacity to give people a sense of their own worth as individuals. Part of that may have been cause, part the effect, of the fact that she was unwilling to confine herself to the routine of her heavy job. She reached out into the social work field, took whatever courses were available, and tried her hand at least once at the task of running a district office. In later years she did field work in some of the smaller communities for the National Recreation Association and showed rather unusual skill both in her out-reaching quality to respond to requests and in her ability to follow through.

All this experience bore her in good stead when she became the official reporter of the Conference. Reporting conferences was not a new experience for her. She had reported on meetings when she was a private secretary and for quite a period of time had been the official reporter for the conferences of the National Recreation Association. She had enough flexibility to recognize what people were trying to say or to do when they, themselves, were hampered by inarticulateness. She had a genuine appreciation for the person behind the act, and this appreciation colored what might otherwise have been drab routine.

While, as we have said before, she did not think of herself as a professional social worker, she did make definite contributions to the growth of the profession of social work. In this Cumulative Index, which she partially completed just before her death, she has again given the profession tools with which to work, has bridged the gap between static material and its imaginative use. The Index is more than a mechanical device. Into its making went an awareness of professional content, of professional values, of professional objectives. Again Bertha Freeman Hooper has made available in permanent form that which might otherwise have been lost.
